Working to Resolve Challenging Business Issues

Our attorneys appreciate that legal issues and disputes can be very risky for closely held businesses. We also know that smaller businesses generally do not have the same resources as larger corporations. Our practice aims to provide the ongoing, comprehensive legal representation closely held companies require in a highly cost-effective manner. We pay careful attention to potential costs implications and work directly with our clients to identify courses of action that make sound business and financial sense.

The attorneys in our practice are also very familiar with the myriad of issues that can surface in family-owned closely held businesses. While these businesses face many of the same challenges inherent in running any company, complex familial relationships can present additional obstacles and difficulties. Disagreements among family members over finances, control, ownership, succession, and other matters are often highly charged and are best handled by seasoned lawyers who understand the family dynamics. At Einhorn Barbarito, our lawyers have decades of collective experience advising family businesses, often across multiple generations. We know how to help family members work through their differences to find solutions that advance their businesses while preserving important family relationships.
